HELD IN THE LIGHT, is not a tale of anger and despair. It is, rather, one Quaker woman's journey toward peace and understanding in coping with unspeakable tragedy, both personal and national. Anne Morrison Welch's account of reconciliation with her daughters, with the former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara, under whose window Norman Morrison set himself afire, offer just two of the remarkable meditations in this book. The name Norman Morrison appears often as a hushed aside in discussions of self-sacrifice; it is a footnote in the history of the Viet nam War. On November 2, 1965, Morrison, a 31-year-old Quaker from Baltimore, drove with his one-year-old daughter, Emily, to Washington, D.C. In protest of the war, he doused himself in kerosene and set himself on fire outside Robert McNamara's Pentagon office. Emily was unharmed.
